President Caputo to retire in 2003

Dr. Joseph A. Caputo, president of Millersville University for almost 22 years, announced on June 5 his intention to retire, effective June 30, 2003.

"There are many reasons both personal and professional that went into my decision to retire," he said. "But, what really drove the decision was my belief that the time is right for change in leadership at the University with many important projects now coming to fruition and other initiatives soon to be launched and requiring longer term stewardship.

"Even now," President Caputo continued, "I feel the excitement as construction and renovation begins on several new facilities, as plans come together for celebration of the institution's 150th anniversary in 2004-05 and as the conclusion of the 'quiet' phase of a capital campaign nears. New leadership presents opportunities to navigate uncharted territory, which, in turn, leads to new directions and priorities, and even greater accomplishments and successes."

Dr. Caputo was named president in January 1981, and under his leadership MU made significant changes in the academic program, management structure, student life opportunities and campus infrastructure.

"Whatever successes I may have had during my tenure," he said, "I attribute mainly to the extraordinary support and efforts of dedicated trustees, faculty and staff."

R.R. Donnelley's CEO advises graduates to make waves

"Changes in business, culture and politics are coming so fast—there is no more status quo. Everything—and I mean everything—that you take for granted is subject to change," said William L. Davis, chairman, president and chief executive officer for R.R. Donnelley Company, at the May 11 commencement ceremony.

"Change keeps coming faster and faster—and if you don't respond to it, you won't survive." For example, more than half of the companies on the 1975 Fortune 500 list have since disappeared.

Davis urged the 740 graduates and their friends and families to make waves. "People who don't make waves are people who would rather be comfortable than creative. They would prefer to settle for the status quo. The irony is that the very concept of 'status quo' has become passé."

Although the corporate headquarters is in Chicago, Donnelley has more employees (3,100) in Lancaster than in any other location in the world and has strong connections to the community and the University.

"We are deeply invested in the success of Millersville University. We look to this institution to supply us with employees skilled at critical thinking and problem-solving. That's why we take part in the Lancaster Partnership [Program]."

The Lancaster Partnership Program offers financially and academically eligible students enrolled in the School District of Lancaster the incentive to finish high school, and a unique opportunity to get a college education. It was formed in 1988 to brighten the educational future of Lancaster City's African-American and Latino students. Under this innovative program, eleven sponsoring businesses, including Donnelley, provide funds to cover the costs of tuition, room, and board not covered by federal or state grants.

Letters to the Editor

The cover story on ROTC was interesting and, of course, quite fashionable. I was at MU in the bad old sixties, and those days of "giving peace a chance" being "in" are very precious and helped to stimulate my then-military husband and me to travel the road to pacifism.

Horrific as 9/11 was, there are constructive alternatives to war, and I hope that there are students and professors at MU who are raising their voices in protest and are offering a serious dialogue on issues relating to war, terrorism, and U.S. foreign policies.

I read with great interest your article about Ben Groff's trip to Antarctica. You suggested that he had gone where no other Millersville alumnus has gone. My husband and I travelled from California to Antarctica in 1998 for a three-week journey around about one-third of the continent. Not only did we see the sights on the peninsula, but travelled below the Antarctic Circle to the mainland. We sailed for three days along the Ross Ice Shelf, visited the huts of Ernest Shackleton and Robert Scott, and saw many species of penguins, seals and whales. At one point, we were about 750 miles from the South Pole. Ice formations prevented our landing at the U.S. McMurdo Station. Instead, we visited the Italian research station where we had a great cup of cappuccino. We were excited to find that among our on-board companions were Sir Patrick Moore, the British astronomer, and Sir Edmund Hillary, the conqueror of Mt. Everest. Our final port on the trip was Christchurch, New Zealand, before heading back home.

I just received the spring issue of the Millersville Review. Upon completion of reading from front to back, I realized that Mr. Chet Marshall '70 letter to the editor was on to something more than just a letter about his son.

Since the "War on Terrorism" is in full swing it would be great if the Review did a story on current students and alumni presently serving on active duty around the world.

On September 11, 2001, I was called upon to return to active duty. I am a reservist and a member of the United States Coast Guard Port Security Unit 305. We were immediately deployed to New York City to secure the harbor surrounding Ground Zero in support of "Operation Guarding Liberty." I was released from active duty on 11 November 2001, and returned to my company in York, Pa. We were activated again on 11 January 2002. This time we were heading to Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, in support of "Operation Enduring Freedom." Our mission while here is to guard the coast that borders the Taliban and Al Qaeda detainee prison. I am a Senior Chief Health Service Technician with over 25 years of military service that included my years at Millersville. I can relate to the sacrifices that one may endure including separation from family, business, or college. I think current students and alumni would agree with me and say thank you to the David Marshalls of the world, and to the rest of the military. After all, it wouldn't be "The Land of the Free" without their sacrifices.

MU-educated teachers score high on assessment exams

Millersville University has been selected as the Commonwealth's featured "public" teacher preparation institution.

This distinction comes as a result of a positive Pennsylvania Professional Development Assistance Program (PDAP) report on K-12 teachers who attended MU. MU alumni teachers performed extremely well on the PDAP's tests, which focus on reading and mathematics at the elementary, middle school and high school levels. The testing initiative was created last year to help teachers, school districts and preparing colleges and universities improve their in-service and curricula offerings. The test results were announced recently by Secretary of Education Charles Zogby.

The University's teacher alumni were among some 33,000 state teachers who were tested. In all, 71 teacher preparation institutions and 154 school districts received PDAP reports.

Commenting on Millersville's honor, Dr. Jane Bray, dean of the School of Education, said, "Our graduates are to be congratulated on their success, as well as Millersville University's excellent faculty who assisted in preparing these teachers. While the results of these tests fail to provide information on teacher performance in the classroom, they do provide data that confirms our excellence in preparing teachers with a strong liberal arts background coupled with mathematics and reading support from our teacher preparation programs."

Casting call in bronze

The same group of artisans that cast the triceratops for the Smithsonian Institution last year is once again busy casting in bronze.

Yale University's Peabody Museum of Natural History has commissioned the University artists to complete a number of pieces for inclusion in its "Human Origins Exhibit." In all, ten different pieces will be cast into bronze from wax forms. The pieces will include five modern human skulls and mandibles, a chimpanzee skull and mandible, and others.

The project is to be completed this summer. The exhibit at the Peabody is planned for between late fall and early next spring.

Drought watching

Ongoing drought conditions is the region's big weather story. In response, MU's Weather Information Center has launched a drought watch web page.

Eric Horst, director of the center, expects the drought to continue throughout the year. Establishing a special web page provides a logical method to disseminate drought information to the general public and to the media. Plans are to update the site every Wednesday throughout the summer and fall.

The web page includes an analysis of the current situation, a precipitation summary, an outlook, the drought history, drought maps and various other drought statistics.

The website address is www.atmos.millersville.edu/~cws/DroughtWatch.html

MU PEOPLE

Assistant Provost for Academic Services

Dr. John O. Bello-Ogunu will join the University in July as assistant provost for academic services and retention. Formerly, he was assistant provost for multicultural affairs at Auburn University. In that position he provided leadership for Auburn's Office of Multicultural Affairs and implemented various all-inclusive multicultural diversity initiatives. He also held the rank of associate professor.

Director of Admissions

Douglas Zander joins Millersville as director of admissions in late July. Previously, he was vice president of enrollment and campus life and dean of students at Paul Smith's College, located in the Adirondacks of northern New York. He earned his bachelor's degree in communications at West Chester University and his master's degree in culture and policy studies at the State University of New York/Empire State College.

Retirements

John F. Apple, associate professor of wellness and sport sciences, retired in May. He also served as head swimming and diving coach, head tennis coach and coordinator of the University's aquatic programs.

Dr. Karen L. Black, assistant professor of foreign languages, will retire in July. She joined MU in 1991 to teach Russian. She also has worked with Amnesty International and with Soviet emigrés.

Dr. Ruth M. Buehler, professor of special education, retired in May. Since joining MU in 1969, she taught at both the undergraduate and graduate levels, and supervised special education student teachers.

campus news

Darrell C. Davis, director of admissions, retired in May. While at Millersville, he guided the implementation of an aggressive recruitment plan to enroll more high profile students and worked to increase faculty and staff participation in the recruitment process. Davis served on the Commission on Cultural Diversity and chaired the Student Achievement Committee.

Dr. Olga del C. Iglesias, associate professor of foreign languages, will retire in July. Besides teaching undergraduate and graduate courses in Spanish, she served on the Faculty Senate and on the Department of Education's Advisory Board on International Education Programs. She received Pennsylvania's Certificate for Excellence in Teaching in 1976-77.

Dr. Dennis Denenberg, professor of elementary and early childhood education, will retire in August. He joined the University in 1987 after serving as assistant superintendent in Manheim Township School District. He is well-known for developing and hosting "Heroes" presentations, and for co-authoring the book, 50 American Heroes Every Kid Should Meet.

Dr. John M. Lembo, professor of psychology, retired in June. His research interests are in the area of spirituality and human development. During his tenure, he served as department chairperson, and authored a number of books, including The Psychology of Effective Classroom Instruction and Why Teachers Fail.

Donald A. Eidam, associate professor of mathematics, retired in May. He joined MU in 1967. In addition to teaching, he served as chairperson of the Faculty Senate in the mid-1990s.

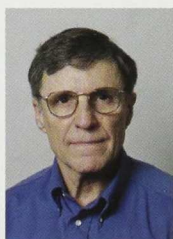

Dr. G. Alfred Forsyth, professor of psychology, retired in May. His first position at Millersville was provost and vice president for academic affairs. Three years later, in 1989, he joined the faculty of the Department of Psychology. His primary interests included statistics-research methodology and life span psychology.

David L. Myer, associate vice president for finance and administration, retired in April. He began his MU career in 1976 as assistant personnel director. In the ensuing years, Myer served as director of finance and budget and then associate vice president. Myer helped steer the University from a totally manual accounting system to an automated one.

Dr. Joseph W. Grosh, professor of physics, will retire in August. He also served as chairperson of the Department of Physics (1990-93) and was responsible for developing the physics computer engineering emphasis program.

Dr. Rodrigo Solera, professor of foreign languages, came to MU to teach Spanish in 1970. During the intervening years, he taught a variety of foreign language department courses at both the graduate and undergraduate levels. He also has presented numerous papers during meetings of professional organizations and has had a number of his articles—some focusing on Costa Rican novels—published.

Dr. M. Khalil Hamid, professor of economics, retired in January. He joined the MU staff in 1968. In addition to his classroom work, he served as chairperson of the Department of Economics for several years and was dean of social sciences from 1970-1974. As a management and economics consultant, he provided economic and strategic studies for large corporations, research institutes and developing countries.

Dr. Margaret R. Tassia, professor of elementary and early childhood education, retired in June. She joined MU as director of the media center at the Jenkins School. She became assistant professor of library science in 1978 and department chair in 1981. In addition, she served as a supervisor of student teaching. In 1998, she was part of the prestigious 15-member panel that selected the 1999 Newbery Medal award-winning author for children's literature.

Making Strides

with

At MIT's Leg Lab, researcher and double amputee Hugh Herr '90 brings a unique perspective to his inventions of robotic prosthetics.

By Maryalice Yakutchik

"I'm fortunate that I was able to find a passion after climbing," he says. "A lot of people find one passion, and when they're over the hill, they can only talk about the golden years."

Intelligent Limbs

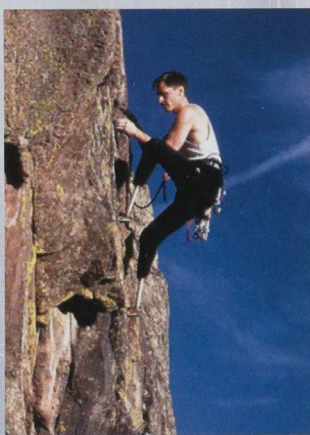

Among the photos of dazzling adventures and exotic locales that decorate the dining room wall of his parents' family farm in Lancaster County, there's one of Hugh Herr that's both poignant and premonitory. Then 17 and one of the country's most upwardly mobile young climbers, Herr is defying gravity on an erratically pitched rock face in New York's craggy Shawangunks. He is silhouetted by a sunrise, the rays of which seem to emanate from a pinnacle that's achingly near.

A new day is dawning on Herr and, seemingly, for him. His future looks bright, indeed.

Ironically, the photo was snapped shortly before Herr's near-fatal outing in January 1982 on Mount Washington in New Hampshire, before both his legs were amputated inches below the knees, a cruel result of frostbite.

If this 20-year-old picture on the dining room wall captures Herr's glory days as an athlete, the scene that's playing out here tonight in the adjoining kitchen captures Herr's glory days as an academician, scientist, inventor, athlete and amputee; in other words, his glory days as a whole person.

The scene: A cameraman for National Geographic is moving impressive equipment around the kitchen table, trying to avoid tangling his trail of wires with those leading to lights and microphones. A director is coaching Herr's parents, Jim and Martha, about how to act naturally while playing themselves in their own home for the purpose of an hour-long television documentary about their 37-year-old son. (Herr's story will be one of a series of 13 profiles about contemporary people who are advancing the Geographic vision.) Momentarily displaced from the stressful center of attention, Herr yawns and stretches his legs, walking stiffly to the 'fridge which the sound man has just unplugged in order to quiet its incessant buzzing. Herr extracts a Tupperware container, nukes its gravy-congealed contents, and wolfs down a plateful of lukewarm leftovers.

Just back from an afternoon of climbing at one of his boyhood haunts on the banks of the Susquehanna, Herr is breathlessly pressed for time. He and the crew are scheduled to leave here in a few hours for Las Vegas, where they'll film another climbing segment in picturesque Red Rocks.

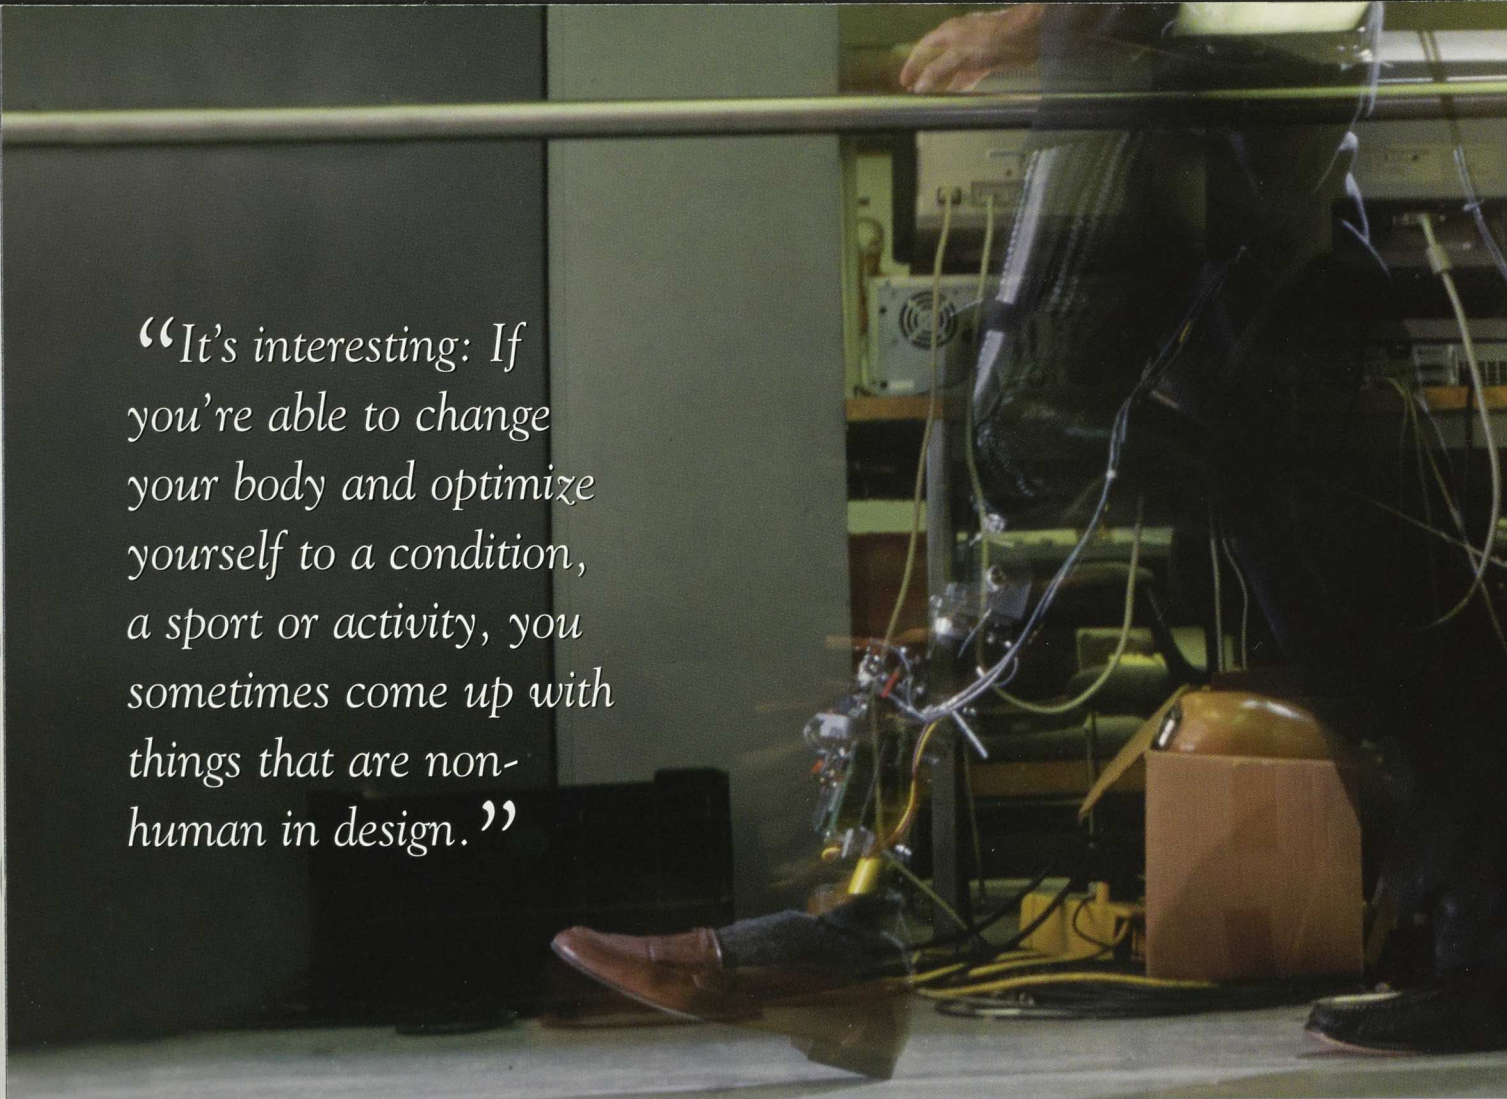

Intrepid and bold though he may be, Herr is reticent by nature and a scientist by profession: two irrefutable reasons for eschewing any and all media attention. This same reserved man who admits having turned down an interview request by Peter Jennings (among countless others) insists that he wants to enjoy participating in this National Geographic film project—really he does—but still, he can't help but resent it for consuming precious days that he'd otherwise be spending in the Artificial Intelligence Laboratory at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology where he's on the faculty. "When you're at MIT, you're just bombarded by the press," he says. "You have to turn most people away."

Although he deems this National Geographic project to be worth his while and trusts it to be of high quality, Herr laments that it's taking him away from what he should be doing: "which is begging for money."

Juggling ten ongoing research projects, Herr has a proposal due by the 15th of the following month for research funding for a tissue engineering project. The most exciting thing about his work, he says, is the diversity: "When I get sick of one project, I can switch gears."

The focus of all of his efforts is the same, however: human rehabilitation and amplification; attaching technology to humans to amplify performance, or rehabilitate.

The director situates Jim and Martha around the kitchen table, now cleared of all homey artifacts to make room for an odd, robotic-looking centerpiece. It's an external knee system—one of Hugh's latest inventions and the subject of a discussion being rehearsed by his parents.

“Is it an unlikely scenario,” the director asks Herr, “that you would bring your knee home to show your parents what you’re up to?”

Herr nods in the affirmative.

“Weird kid,” chuckles the director whose mandate from National Geographic is to do a “natural” character study of Herr.

No matter. The script is deemed believable, in part because time is running out. The director cues Herr.

“That’s a knee?” his father asks incredulously.

Hugh describes the new device. It’s competitively lightweight, he says: made of an aluminum alloy. It’s powered by a battery and designed to go for a full 16-hour day. What sets it apart, he explains, is a computer chip that receives sensory information and exerts appropriate forces. This knee has the ability to “think.” As a person walks, the knee responds to his changing gait, allowing for a high level of symmetry. In other words, it adapts.

Herr has more than mere professional understanding about this cagey concept of “adapting.” He embodies it, personally.

As a young mountaineer with his sights set on a lofty career in climbing, he reconsidered his route and redefined himself after his accident, showing remarkable agility and adaptability. He metamorphosed from a mediocre high school student at Penn Manor into a serious scholar at Millersville University. Herr found hand- and foot-holds at MU in math and physics. Here, he recognized able guides and mentors in the persons of math professor Don Eidam and physics professors Michael Nolan and John Dooley. Herr graduated summa cum laude in 1990 and then ventured higher, traversing an ambitious if unlikely route: first earning a master’s degree in mechanical engineering from MIT and then a doctorate in biophysics from Harvard University.

The tape is still running; the clock, ticking.

“Our next project is to develop an artificial ankle,” Hugh says, remembering the script.

“I had an amputee tell me the other day that he really needs an ankle,” his mother, Martha, replies on cue.

“Hell, I need an ankle,” sighs Hugh.

Herr is a bilateral below-knee amputee who, to this point, has developed quite a few ingenious devices that he, himself, can’t use: one of them being the artificial knee; another being running shoes with springs in the soles for able-bodied persons.

“We went to Dupont to present our running shoe,” Herr says.

“They asked us how do we know anything about the design of running shoes. My partner said, "Well, he doesn't have any feet (meaning me). So maybe we have a chance of thinking out-of-the-box. I think they were dumb-founded. We have five patents now. We're close to selling the technology to a shoe company."

© 2002 Peter Menzel

Herr continually works to develop ingenious devices that adapt to the human body.

Early on in his career, Herr developed his own prosthetic climbing devices. They look different from the "normal" prosthetic legs he's wearing now. He doesn't wear shoes when he climbs, and the "feet" do not look human. They are the size of a small child's foot – about five inches in length – and devoid of heels.

"It's an optimal design," Herr explains, "because the shorter the foot, the better for climbing. In climbing, you want to get your body as close to the wall as possible.

"It's interesting: If you're able to change your body and optimize yourself to a condition, a sport or activity, you sometimes come up with things that are non-human in design."

These days, Herr rarely climbs. What once consumed his life is now an extra-curricular activity for which he simply can't find the time.

"I have an ambition to go to the rock gym once a week for overall fitness," he says. "I have no ambition to be competitive, which would necessitate climbing seven days a week."

Herr hasn't trained for the National Geographic shoot in Red Rocks: "I'm going from sitting in an office in front of a computer to high on a mountain. It's somewhat nerve-racking, to say the least. But I have a reputation for doing well off the couch."

The mental gymnastics required by a career in academics make his life "very satisfying," Herr says. Even more so, he adds, than climbing.

"I'm fortunate that I was able to find a passion after climbing," he says. "A lot of people find one passion, and when they're over the hill, they can only talk about the golden years."

Finding one's passion requires a sense of direction. Having wandered aimlessly—without a compass—for three days and nights on Mount Washington in bitter, swirling winds and having nearly frozen to death as a result, Herr appreciates better than most of us the need for direction. After the accident, Millersville became Herr's compass. That's why, in the fall of 2001, Herr took time out of his schedule to revisit the campus and present a science lecture at the University's Science and Technology Building. The topic: What animals teach us about machine design. Herr talked a bit about his personal career route, but mostly about current research including the marvels of hybrid robotic fish.

When he recalls his Millersville days, his voice acquires a bit of an edge: "I had one B. In Intro to Film, of all things. In quantum physics, I got an A, but I couldn't get an A in film."

The director for the National Geographic series overhears Herr and raises his eyebrows: "We're gonna change that," he promises.

No doubt about it. If the art of film isn't Herr's forte, the science of change certainly is.

This segment is a wrap: "Can we break away for a few minutes?"

It's been a long day. The taping started early this morning with Herr reliving the accident on Mount Washington. Twenty years later, both his father and mother still cry at the telling of the story. Hugh himself sometimes becomes emotional. "I just picture a lot of snow. Cold. Pain."

He's in a bit of pain now, in fact. He touches a button just below his knee under his left pant leg and, with a barely discernable click, releases his prosthetic. Clearly, Herr feels great relief in having escaped from the camera and freed himself of his artificial leg. He smiles.

"Most people, when you push their buttons, they become angry. Me, my legs just fall off."

STORY BY KELLY (GERHARD) SMEDLEY '93

The college years are a time for young adults to broaden their minds intellectually. Students at Millersville do so by attending classes, listening to lectures, writing lengthy term papers and—of course—discussing the state of the world over a heaping plate of Jack's fries smothered in a goopy pile of gravy. What could be more academic than that?

"Jack's fries are a great treat without the cholesterol count."

While, admittedly, college is a time to hit the books, along with it comes a lot of free time. Students find themselves void of the schedules, curfews and other demanding rituals their parents had arranged for them and are allowed to manage (or mismanage) their own calendar.

When students aren't in the classroom or studying feverishly for an exam—you will most likely find them engaged in the art of "hanging out." This phenomenon typically involves groups of people with similar interests converging in a certain location and partaking in some form of social activity. The most popular activity seems to be eating, although it can range from playing pool to swimming in a pool.

"Hanging out" is also not a new phenomenon. It appears that since Millersville's inception there have been places where students have hung.

There was The Ford's Tea Room (once located at the intersection of North George Street and Route 999 where the Uni-Mart now stands) where in the early part of the 20th century the female students went to "have their smokes." Another location named the "Bush"—deep in the woods near the Conestoga—is where students went to "make out."

In the 1960s and '70s there was the "Rat" and the "Mouse" which predated the Student Memorial Center or SMC which is pronounced "Smack." One alumna recalled, "I remember going to the Mouse for lunch and getting toasted cheese sandwiches with tomato and side of French fries."

Dr. Ralph "Doc Rock" Anttonen, who has been an institution at the

'Ville for the past 31 years—recalls the "Rat." "Dutcher Hall is now where the Rat was," said Anttonen. "It was like a mini SMC."

Anttonen, professor of developmental studies, also serves as the adviser to the campus radio station, WIXQ. He recently polled his students on where they "hang out" and the first thing they did is correct him on his use of vernacular.

"I said I wanted to talk to them about hanging out and they looked at me like I was crazy," laughed Anttonen. "Nowadays, it seems the minute you graduate from college you're old."

"The SMC is by far the most popular hang-out place for kids," said Anttonen. "It's become such a huge place with racquetball courts and other facilities."

Not only is the SMC a popular hangout—the dining area has become downright territorial. The Greek organizations in particular have surreptitiously mapped out their own areas where they convene. Some athletic teams also have their special sections—and along with it an unwritten rule not to cross into uncharted waters.

"If someone sat in someone else's space it would be kind of awkward," said Erica Swift '03, who works part time at the SMC reception desk. "It's well known where everyone should sit."

Swift said the food at the SMC is pretty good although everyone jokes about the breakfast. "They say, 'You know what a SMC breakfast does to you...'," said Swift. "Some people do come to study in the back of the café. It's not very bright, but it's something different from the library."

Another popular hangout is the House of Pizza—although it's never called by its real name: The most popular (and acceptable) nickname being the House of Pie. The pizzeria tends to be more popular with the older students since it serves beer. The dining area is split right down the middle with an "Over 21" and an "Under 21" section. It seems to be a rite of passage when a student turns 21 and can make the leap to the other side of the Pie. Kinda like loosing the booster seat.

"Once you're out of the dorms you learn about the House of Pie," said Swift. "Before then it's the Sugar Bowl."

Ah, the Sugar Bowl. Many a "Freshman '15" has been cashed in at this establishment. There should be some sort of law against delivering pizza to a dorm room at 2 a.m.

"Once you're out of the dorms you learn about the House of Pie," said Swift. "Before then it's the Sugar Bowl."

Seriously, the Sugar Bowl is an MU icon that has been around more than 40 years. The restaurant is most famous for its strombolis, and it's in a perfect location, too; near many of the academic buildings and just a stone's throw from the football field.

"I used to go there for breakfast with a couple friends two or three times a week," said Ned Bushong '99. "If I had an early class we would go there after and sit for a few hours. It's just sort of the American culture...you hang out with food."

Owner Michael Carpouzis is glad to have them. "The kids are really good...they are never any trouble," said Carpouzis. "A lot study at the tables at night." Carpouzis said the restaurant gets packed during lunch and students are literally lined up to get their 'boli fixes.

Another popular pizza establishment is Two Cousins.

"We really only have two or three tables," said owner Joseph Picone. "But we can get 20-30 people in here at a time. We are moving to a bigger place on Manor Avenue in a couple of months."

There have also been some more recent on-campus additions that have become popular hangout spots—one being Club d'Ville.

"It's a good place to play pool cheap," said Brian Johnson '04, who works the desk at Club d'Ville. "It's a place to socialize, watch TV on the big screen, play movies and games. Johnson said live bands also play at Club d'Ville a few times a week. "All types of people come here and the bands that perform play all different types of music," said Johnson. "It's kind of cool."

The George Street Café (formerly College Coffee Roasters) has become a more subdued hangout for all segments of the Millersville population.

"We get every kind of crowd...college kids, high school kids, professors, the elderly," said Matt Moore, a cook and deli worker at George Street. "It's kind of a study hall environment. People like to talk, but most show up alone and do homework. There's a real sense of community."

Of course, what would this story be without mentioning (once again) one of the most admired eateries near campus? Jack's Restaurant.

"Jack's fries are still cheap and still huge," said Swift. Jack's owner Jack Gamaldi once said that his employees don't get in trouble for putting too many fries on the plate; they get in trouble for not putting enough on the plate.

But Jack's was not always "all that and a side of fries." Before Gamaldi took over the establishment in 1986 it was known as The Inn at Millersville. It had such a wild reputation for parties that it was once written up in Playboy magazine. Gamaldi changed all that and has a strictly enforced ID policy that keeps his fries and other delicious fare in the spotlight.

While all these locales had proved to be popular hangouts for students—be it for the food or entertainment offerings—there still remains the single most popular hangout that can offer none or both: The dorm room.

"I remember hanging out in the lounge at the end of the hall of my dorm," said Susan Ziemer '66. "These were the days of having one TV on each floor and many of us getting together in the evenings to watch TV together."

"In the 60s, the one show I remember being very excited about watching was 'The Man from U.N.C.L.E.' Imagine the quaintness of a whole group of girls agreeing to watch one show and having only one TV for that whole group."

This writer remembers hanging out in her dorm room. In fact every Wednesday between 2-3 in the afternoon about 15 friends from my hall would pile on my tiny twin bed and watch "The Brady Bunch." We called it "The Brady Hour" and it was not to be missed.

And neither is college. So whatever you call it these days...enjoy it!

WIXQ reunion

More than 100 alumni of WIXQ/WMSR campus radio station enjoyed the April 6 reunion. Former disc jockeys, station managers, program managers, advisers and administrators converged to hold one of the University's most successful reunions of the season. Plans are underway for a similar event to celebrate the station's 30th anniversary in 2003.

As part of the reunion, a WIXQ scholarship fund was established. Donations are being accepted to build the fund for future distribution. For more information about this scholarship fund, please call the Alumni Services office at 800-681-1855.

Lancaster & York alumni branches

And they're off...

The Lancaster and York County branches of the MU Alumni Association joined forces for "A Night at the Races" on April 13 at Penn National. About 50 alumni and friends, novices and veteran bettors enjoyed the private dining room featuring its own betting window. Although the fog rolled in for the last couple of races, those in attendance had a great time. There were even a few "winners" in the crowd.

LANCASTER BRANCH

"Takes to the ice"

Lancaster alumni and friends headed for Hershey on March 2 to see the Hershey Bears take on the Philadelphia Phantoms. Fans had a big thrill in seeing a super come-back by the Bears in an overtime win of 2-1.

YORK BRANCH

A small contingency from York visited Lancaster on March 9. After lunch at the Pressroom Restaurant, alumni and friends strolled through Central Market and enjoyed the production of "The Importance of Being Earnest" at the Fulton Opera House.

Annual meeting

Due to the closing of Rutter's Restaurant in York, the branch's annual meeting was held at Millersville on April 6. In addition to the meeting and lunch, alumni enjoyed campus tours and several members attended the ACMO (All Campus Musical Organization) performance of "The Wiz."

Plans to move next year's meeting to a location in York are being made by the branch's steering committee.

Florida Gold Coast reunion

The Gold Coast Reunion was held on March 17 at the home of Bob '49 and Elizabeth Zellers in Port St. Lucie, Florida. With 28 people, it was the largest turnout for this annual event so far. A wide range of alumni attended including graduates from 1925 through 1999. Alumni came from Florida's west coast, south of Ft. Lauderdale and as far north as Cocoa Beach. Be sure to look for this event next March.

Five elected to alumni board

Five alumni were recently elected to the MU Alumni Association's Board of Directors for two-year terms beginning in July:

- Arthur Drescher '64, Glenside, teacher, Abington School District (incumbent)
- Linda Thompson '84, Mount Joy, customer service representative, Donegal Mutual Insurance Company (incumbent)
- Paul Titter '74, Lancaster, learning support teacher, School District of Lancaster (incumbent)
- Megan Baumgartner '01, Saratoga Springs, N.Y., annual fund assistant director, Skidmore College

Taste of the Big Apple

MU alumni and friends from the New York metropolitan area enjoyed a casual happy hour at the Bryant Park Grill in Manhattan on March 11. About 20 people gathered to greet each other and hear details about what's happening at MU. Jerry Eckert, vice president of University advancement, and Kristie Davis, assistant director of Alumni Services, welcomed guests and shared news from MU. Alumni offered suggestions and comments on how the Alumni Association and the University could better communicate and interact with alumni in major metropolitan areas.

Music alumni reception

During the PMEA Conference at Philadelphia's Adams Mark Hotel, the Alumni Association hosted a dessert reception for Department of Music alumni. The reception was held April 19 at 10 p.m., immediately following the All-State Jazz Band concert, and was a great success. We plan to make this an annual event.

Lambda Chi Alpha association formed

Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity formed an alumni association to aid in continuing the friendships developed at MU and to provide alumni programming for the fraternity.

The association will also sponsor academic-based scholarships for members every semester and an annual one campuswide. This scholarship will cover a student's book expenses of approximately $300-$500 for a semester.

For more information, visit the website featuring an interactive online community for members at <http://ville-lambdachi.org>. Or email Chris Driscoll at Christopher.Driscoll@villanova.edu

Grants awarded

The Alumni Association awarded Neimeyer-Hodgson research grants to each of the ten applications. Grants ranged from $200 to $700 for a total about $4,000 for the spring semester.

Alumni Association Awards presented

Before a crowd of 1,000 students, faculty, staff, alumni, parents and friends, Dr. Gene A. Carpenter received MU's Honorary Alumnus Award and Stephen L. Powell '72 accepted the Distinguished Service Award.

During the Honors and Awards Convocation held May 4, Stephen L. Powell '72 and Dr. Gene A. Carpenter were presented with the Alumni Association's highest awards.

Distinguished Service Award

Stephen L. Powell '72, president and owner of Powell Steel Corporation, received the 2002 Distinguished Service Award, the most prestigious commendation bestowed on living graduates. Founded in 1994, Powell Steel is a well-known local structural steel fabricator and erector, employing more than 75 people. In addition to overseeing his company, Powell has been active in community organizations including the Lancaster Chamber of Commerce and Industry Board of Directors, the Southeast Lancaster Sertoma Club and the Regional Minority Purchasing Council. Currently, a member of the Advisory Board for the Center for Academic Development at MU, he also is head basketball coach at McCaskey High School.

Powell earned a bachelor's degree in elementary education and social sciences from Millersville and has completed graduate work in counseling and management at West Chester University. While at MU, he played basketball for four years and was named an all ECAC (Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) player and received the Ainsworth Award for Most Valuable Player.

Honorary Alumnus Award

Dr. Gene A. Carpenter, former MU head football coach, was presented with the 2002 Honorary Alumnus Award.

Carpenter retired in February 2001 after more than 31 years of service as head football coach, director of men's athletics, and professor of health and physical education.

Under his leadership, MU football teams won ten Eastern Division championships and 49 players were All-Americans. Carpenter also led successful efforts to improve facilities and student-athlete scholarship support, and serves as a member of the MU Athletic Hall of Fame Committee.

Outstanding Service Awards

At the All-Alumni Luncheon on May 4, five Outstanding Service Awards for long and exemplary service to the Alumni Association and the University were presented to:

- Dr. Kathleen M. Brabson '70, Lancaster, teacher, Penn Manor School District
- Douglas W. Cherry '80, Lancaster, director of business development, Wickersham Construction
- Dr. Richard L. Frerichs '64, Conestoga, education professor and coordinator of field services and certification, Millersville University

Alumni Snapshot

Dori & friends, Class of '71

In May 1971, four young women graduated from Millersville (l-r, Dori (Rapp) Hoch, Janet (Leinbach) Sanders, Linda (Bernhard) Psomas, and Linda (Fake) Hasson). They promised to keep in touch and continue their friendship. It was a promise they have kept for three decades.

The friends came to know each other in the fall of 1967 at the then brand new Tanger Hall. As freshmen, they carried "those infernal handbooks everywhere" and their paths regularly crossed at the dorm, dining hall, and in classes—all being elementary education majors.

According to Dori Hoch, "Looking back now, fantastic friends are one of the best things to come from my four years at Millersville." Among her memories is "standing in those never-ending dining hall lines," sliding down snow covered hills on food trays, and sunbathing on the lawn in the spring.

Senior year, they shared a second floor apartment in "a dilapidated house" on North Frederick Street. "Getting up those rickety steps was a challenge, especially when they were ice covered, or at night when bats hovered nearby," wrote Hoch.

The friends kept in touch and, by the late 1970s, their reunions became a required summer activity. For the thirtieth anniversary of their graduation, the "gang" decided to return to Millersville's campus last July. They met at the Student Memorial Center which was just in the planning stages during their student days. Their walk down memory lane took them to Gordinier dining hall, Tanger Hall rooms, and outside their old apartment, now refurbished (left, Janet Sanders, Linda Psomas, and Dori Hoch).

Instead of going the fine-dining route, the women made the nostalgic choice to lunch at the Sugar Bowl. They noticed the larger dining area, and expanded menu. "But, the atmosphere was still the same," Hoch remembered. "There were groupings of students and adults clustered throughout the dining area chatting and laughing."

This one's for Coach

By Greg Eynon '02, wrestling captain

This season, MU's wrestling team proved that no matter what the adversity, a strong will to win cannot be deterred. The school year got off to a horrible start, with the team learning that our beloved coach, Shorty Hitchcock, was battling cancer and had only months to live. Fortunately, former Elizabethtown College head coach, Steve Capoferri, stepped in to help Shorty manage the team. An excellent group of assistant coaches—Brian Zeamer, Scott Kendig, and Blaze Cambuzzi—rallied to run practices.

With a promising squad of freshmen, and a strong core of returning letter winners, the team posted a 10-4 dual meet record this season. In every match it seemed that a different young wrestler stepped up to take a leadership role in driving the team to perform to its potential.

A 43-6 win over of Shippensburg highlighted this year's dual meet schedule. It was to be the last time Shorty coached his beloved wrestlers; he passed away the next week. The team went on to qualify four wrestlers for the Division I nationals, while claiming a dominating team victory at the Division I East Regional Championships.

Although suffering a tremendous loss, and facing adversity through the entire season, the Marauder wrestling team marched forward, never showing weakness on the mat. Off the mat the guys not only showed how a team needs to stick together, but how friends need to support each other in times of despair.

Before Shorty died he said, "In my life it wasn't the wins and losses that counted, but it was the friends I made along the way." The friendships developed on the 2002 squad will last a lifetime.

Thank you, Shorty, for always being a friend. We love you.

An endowment is being established in memory of Shorty Hitchcock. For more information, contact Mark Duncan at 717-872-3899.

Three coaches honored

The success of three Millersville winter intercollegiate teams was reflected in post-season honors bestowed on the head coaches.

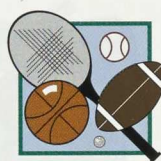

Men's basketball skipper Fred Thompson was chosen as the PSAC Eastern Division Coach of the Year after capturing the first division title since 1995. Thompson's squad compiled a 10-2 conference record—and finished 17-10 overall.

In wrestling, the late Floyd "Shorty" Hitchcock was honored by his peers as NCAA Division I East Region Coach of the Year after his grapplers successfully defended their regional title. He saw his team earn fourth place honors at the PSAC Championships for MU's best conference tourney finish in 22 years.

In women's basketball, Mary Fleig (pictured below) was selected as the WBCA Division II District 2 (East Region) Coach of the Year. Fleig guided the Marauders to a 22-9 overall record, the PSAC Eastern Division championship, and berths in the PSAC tournament championship game and the NCAA Division II East Regional semi-finals. Fleig molded an entirely new starting five into a surprise championship contender, and the team responded with a 13-game winning streak.

Top seniors & student athletes recognized

Greg Eynon, who ably captained the wrestling team during an emotion-filled season and earned NCAA-I East Regional championship honors in the 197-lb. class, and Jen Smith, who was an all-star performer for the MU women's basketball and track and field teams during her intercollegiate career, have been named the winners of the Elwood J. Finley Award as the University's 2001-02 senior athletes of the year.

Eynon twice earned berths in the NCAA Division I national championships including this year. He scored a 14-6 major decision over Slippery Rock University's Corey Hart in the East Regional final in March.

Eynon led the grapplers with a 26-13 record. Of greater importance, however, was his leadership skills as he helped his teammates cope with the terminal illness of their beloved head coach, Floyd "Shorty" Hitchcock. Hitchcock succumbed to cancer in mid-February. (See story by Eynon on page 33.)

This past winter, Eynon was named to the PSAC Top Ten for scholar-athlete excellence and All-Academic by the National Wrestling Coaches Association. A technology education major, he graduated cum laude in May.

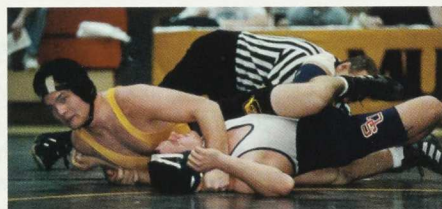

Jen Smith was an all-star performer for MU's women's basketball and track and field teams during her intercollegiate career, averaging 13.5 points per game with a team-high 60 three-point baskets. The 5-8 guard shot a blistering 85% from the free throw line, leading the MU cagers to a 22-9 overall record, a PSAC Eastern Division title, a berth in the PSAC championship game, and advancement to the NCAA-II East Regional semifinal round. She played in a school-record 120 games—never missing a contest. In the javelin, she earned NCAA Division II All-America track and field honors.

A speech communication major, Smith graduated in May and is enrolled in MU's sport management graduate program.

The Faculty-Student Athletic Committee Scholar-Athlete Awards for 2001-02 were presented to forward Jen Groff of the MU field hockey team, and first baseman/designated hitter Jeff Moyer of the 'Ville baseball squad.

Groff, a senior elementary education major with a 3.89 GPA, was a four-year letterwinner and earned dean's list academic distinction every semester as a MU undergraduate.

Moyer, a senior physics major with a 3.76 GPA, batted .238 this spring and he posted a 95 percent fielding average. In 2001, he competed as a reserve pitcher for the Black and Gold. In 1998 and 1999, Moyer was a reserve quarterback for the football team and was a member of the Marauders' NCAA-II quarterfinal squad (9-3 record) in his sophomore season. Moyer, like Groff, has attained PSAC Scholar-Athlete status.

MU wrestling captain Greg Eynon pins his opponent.

STUDENT ATHLETE SPOTLIGHT

Kristina Eger

Balancing the intricate life of the student-athlete is tough: studies, practices, meets and social life. Doing it with a digestive disorder doesn't make it easier.

MU incoming senior tennis player Kristina Eger suffers from ulcerative colitis, a rare disorder that does not allow the body to absorb nutrients from food. Eventually, this can lead to the body shutting down.

Her promising career was nearly cut short earlier this year, as she lay in Lancaster Regional Hospital, unable to do anything but just lay helpless. Fortunately, Eger recovered, just in time to help win their fifth consecutive PSAC Championship.

Eger is a three-year varsity letterwinner. She owns a 50-7 career singles mark and owns the second best winning percentage for any 'Ville doubles player in team history—84.6 percent (58-11). Last year, she was 24-4 in singles matches and 32-6 in doubles matches. Sixty-three of those double wins have come with her primary partner Abbie Sweitzer. Last year the two teamed to win the first-ever national tournament team in 'Ville women's tennis history.

"She just doesn't like to lose, on the court or in life," said Sweitzer.

Though her career on the court may be winding down, her life is really just beginning. May was a busy month: On May 9, she competed in the NCAA Division II tennis championships. Later in the month, she married Rob Dippner—with her doubles partner, Abbie Sweitzer, as one of her bridesmaids.

WOMEN'S TENNIS—Rarely is the "D" word used at Millersville. But in the case of the Marauder women's tennis team, that word—"Dynasty"—is appropriate.

Coach DeWitt Boyd's squad captured their fifth consecutive PSAC and NCAA-II East Regional titles this spring, and in the process, qualified once again for national tournament competition.

Led by senior Abbie Sweitzer became the first player of either gender in MU history to win 100 career matches in both singles and doubles, as well as PSAC Rookie of the Year Kate Opilo, the Marauders won 12 consecutive matches enroute to a 14-2 final record. The Marauders placed three players—Sweitzer, senior Heather Miller (pictured) and junior Hilary Cornelius—on the all-conference first team.

MEN'S TENNIS—Led by PSAC Athlete of the Year Keith Mahaffey and an excellent doubles tandem in juniors Ryan Cuevas and Justin Miller, the Millersville men's tennis squad posted an 11-5 overall dual record. Mahaffey was among five Marauders who won 10 singles matches this year, and he combined with fellow All-PSAC first team senior Igor Petrinovic for a 14-5 doubles mark. The Cuevas-Miller combination was undefeated in dual play (15-0), finished 16-1 overall, and improved its two-year record to 40-8.

BASEBALL—Coach Glenn Gallagher's squad was beset with injuries to as many as six everyday players, and they contributed to a sub-.500 season overall (22-23) and in league (11-13).

One regular who avoided the injury bug and enjoyed a superb senior season was outfielder Mike Wokulich, who led the Marauders in most major offensive categories (.417, 45 RBI) and equaled a school season record for doubles. Junior utility player Jeremy Wunderlich (pictured) emerged as the team's most victorious pitcher (7-4) and he also batted .342 as a first baseman.

SOFTBALL—The emergence of freshman Laura Harris as a premier PSAC pitcher was a highlight of the softball squad's 2002 season. Harris shattered the previous MU season and career strikeout records with a league-leading 203, and she also won more games in a campaign (12) than any other hurler in team history.

Sophomore outfielder Andrea Curwood and senior first baseman Michelle Kuhn provided most of the offensive spark with .399 and .367 batting averages, respectively. Curwood set a team record for hits with 55, and Kuhn hit five home runs this spring to equal a school mark.

GOLF—Sophomore Chris Killiany earned medalist honors at the 2002 PSAC Championships with a one-stroke victory in a 30-player field. Killiany and freshman Scott Micklewright both averaged under 80 strokes per round and each attained all-league honors.

LACROSSE—The 'Ville laxers were proficient when it came to winning the close ones in 2002. Three of MU's seven victories were by one goal and another was by a two-goal margin. The program also recorded its 200th all-time victory in an overtime win (16-14) over league foe Lock Haven.

The attack trio of senior Nikki Matuszewski, junior Kristin Burnheter and sophomore Megan Miller tallied 39, 38 and 38 points, respectively, and All-PSAC first team defender Sarah Bowers was a season-long standout. Matuszewski finished her career with 96 goals, 11th all-time at MU.

MEN'S OUTDOOR TRACK & FIELD—Junior distance ace Mark Stallings earned Outstanding Track Athlete honors at the 2002 PSAC Outdoor Championships in mid-May when he captured the 10,000 meter title and placed second in the 5,000 meters. It marked the second major honor this year for Stallings, who in February was named as the Outstanding Male Athlete of the inaugural PSAC Indoor Championships. Stallings posted top-five national times in the five and ten-kilometer events to qualify for the NCAA-II National Championships in Texas. There, Stallings earned All-American honors in the ten-kilometer Sophomore Chris Trill became the first Marauder competitor to claim the PSAC steeplechase title. Strong third place performances by Jared Schnapf in the 400 meters, Neale MacPherson in the 800 and 1,500 meters, and Steve Pizzulli in the 10,000 meters helped the Marauder tracksters achieve fourth place at the PSACs.

WOMEN'S OUTDOOR TRACK & FIELD—Junior Theresa Mazurek and sophomore Beth Lord led MU in PSAC Championships' competition with runner-up performances in the 1,500 meters and the discus throw, respectively. Freshman Christina Carpenter showed the potential to be a future sprint champion with fourth place efforts in the PSAC 100 and 200-meter finals.
