President takes the reins of leadership

On July 1, Dr. Francine G. McNairy (above) moved into the president's office on the second floor of Biemesderfer Center. The date happened to coincide with the twentieth anniversary of Millersville making the transition from a college to a university. McNairy is the thirteenth top executive of the institution. She succeeds Dr. Joseph A. Caputo who retired June 30, after 22 years as president.

The academic installation of McNairy as president of Millersville University will take place at an inaugural celebration in April; the event is currently in the planning stage.

MU in national rankings

Millersville has again been ranked among the best universities in the nation, according to the latest survey conducted by U.S. News & World Report.

Under the category "Best Universities-Master's," institutions that provide a full range of undergraduate and master's level programs, Millersville ranked 38th out of a total of 165 public and private institutions in the North. Other schools listed in the region include Villanova University, the University of Scranton, and the Rochester Institute of Technology.

Millersville is also listed sixth among top public universities in the North—the highest ranking public institution in Pennsylvania.

Beginning the Millersville experience

For new Millersville students, the lazy, hazy, crazy days of summer also mean coming to campus for summer orientation. This year's orientation theme was Summer Safari: Discover the Challenge. Eight different sessions, organized by academic major or interest, were offered to incoming students.

More than 1,200 freshman and transfer students, along with almost a thousand parents, attended the two-day orientation sessions. Activities included advanced placement testing, sessions on security and safety, recreation, health services and, of course, tours of the campus.

Operated by the Office for Student Programs, the orientation program relies on many University offices and departments to provide the answers and experiences that the students—and their families—need to get started right at Millersville. At the start of the fall semester, Welcome Week also helps students with the transition to college life at Millersville.

Millersville's new disaster studies minor: First in the nation

Some disasters, whether it is an earthquake or an act of terrorism, cannot be avoided. But, preparation and specialized disaster expertise are the best line of defense in dealing with the inevitable public emergency situations.

In 1995, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) initiated a project directed toward higher education's role in preparing the next generation of citizens, leaders and emergency personnel to be better educated in disaster and terrorism mitigation, planning and response needs. As a result, Millersville University developed a disaster studies minor, Environmental Hazards and Emergency Management (EHM).

According to disaster expert and professor of sociology/anthropology, Dr. Henry "Hank" Fischer III, FEMA's goal is "for every state in the nation to have at least one university with a program in disaster studies. MU answered the call."

Currently, Millersville's program is the only one of its kind. Although based on social science research for emergency management needs, it is a multidisciplinary minor that brings together four distinct academic disciplines: sociology, geography, earth sciences and occupational safety.

Why is this important? Fischer, who also is a consultant to the U.S. Departments of Homeland Security, Defense, and Justice and FEMA, asserts that "while sociology provides the necessary understanding of human behavior (victims and responders) and social organization (emergency organizations, communities), it is also important to understand the basic principles involved in meteorology and earthquakes, as well as the handling of hazardous materials and techniques currently used in these situations (Geographic Information System).

"Actually, our program is the only one of its kind in the nation to do this. In my view, all such minors, majors and graduate degree programs should be multidisciplinary."

Disaster expert Professor Fischer is also a consultant to the U.S. Departments of Homeland Security, Defense, and Justice and FEMA.

In addition to courses such as Sociology of Terrorism, Earth Systems and Natural Hazards, Introduction to Occupational Safety, Urban and Regional Planning, Industrial Fire Prevention, Protection and Control, and Geographic Information Systems, students will conduct an independent project or participate in an internship in emergency management.

Fischer predicts an increase of disasters. "The one thing we can count on is that more and more people will be exposed to disasters of all kinds. We continue to build and buy beachfront property despite the threat of hurricanes, storm surges and flooding," Fischer added, "And, in a post-September 11 environment, we find ourselves facing the possibility of confronting newer types of disasters involving radiological, biological, chemical and a new generation of nuclear threats. Average citizens, political leaders, policy makers, news reporters and journalists as well as emergency personnel—first responders, need to take an ever increasing responsibility for protecting themselves, their loved ones, and their communities from the plethora of disaster agents."

"This minor," he said, "is designed to give students [for any career path] appropriate preparation for the future we already find ourselves in."

New Millersville mayor

Richard Moriarty '72 has been appointed by the Millersville Borough Council to serve as mayor. He succeeds Ted Sattler who died June 2. In November, borough residents will elect a candidate to serve out the remainder of Sattler's two-year term.

Moriarty is vice president of e-commerce for Sterling Financial. He first came to Millersville in 1968 as a student and never left. For 28 years he has been a volunteer firefighter in Millersville. His wife, Marge, is a member of the Class of 1984.

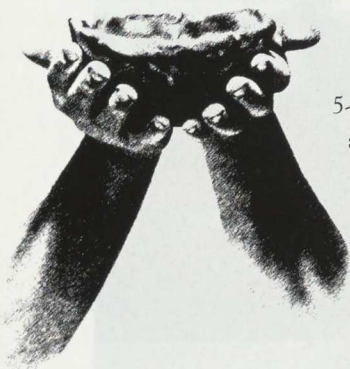

Theodore "Ted" Sattler served as mayor of Millersville from 1998 until his death. After serving in the U.S. Army during World War II, Sattler was a student at Millersville majoring in English and French. Instead of becoming a teacher, he pursued a career in commercial printing. In 1987, he was elected sheriff of Lancaster County and served two four-year terms.

Empty Bowls charity project

On Monday, November 10, MU will host its sixth annual Empty Bowls dinner. The Empty Bowls dinner is part of a national initiative to address hunger within local communities, and is a catalyst for National Hunger Awareness month.

Over the years, Millersville's Empty Bowls has raised more than $10,000. Dinner tickets are $10 each. Patrons receive an original ceramic bowl—made by volunteers including MU alumni—and a simple meal of hearty soup and bread donated from local bakeries and restaurants. Entertainment featuring Millersville students and staff add to this evening of fellowship. A raffle of prizes donated by area businesses, and a silent auction of original prints will add to the excitement. All proceeds will directly benefit local hunger programs.

The dinner will be held in the Reighard Multipurpose Room of the Student Memorial Center on George Street from 5-8 p.m. and is open to all. Advance tickets are available at the University's Community Service Office or at the door the night of the event. Contact the Community Service Office at 717-871-2333 for more information.

Pass the Wojapi berry pudding, please

Wojapi berry pudding was just one of the popular menu items at the Native American Food fest, presented at Gordinier and Lyle halls in March by Millersville's Dining and Conference services.

In addition to the Wojapi berry pudding, menu items included dried sweet corn, gooseberry cobbler, Lakota bread, yam cakes, spiced turkey, three sisters vegetables, and cinnamon butter. The event not only won rave reviews from student diners, but it captured a prestigious second place award from the National Association of College and University Food Services (NACUFS) for its residence hall dining program.

The event celebrated the history, culture, and cuisine of Native Americans. According to Nancy Peterson, food services manager, who spearheaded the event, she relied on historical research concerning the culture and cuisine of a variety of Native American tribes including Cheyenne, Iroquois, Navajo, Cherokee and Seneca.

"Information was available to us from the Internet and from Native American cookbooks, as well as from Dr. Tanya Kevorkian, assistant professor of history," Peterson said. "The event was presented as an educational and entertaining dining activity that featured authentic food items and displays."

Regional native plants and dried flowers, fruits and berries, feathers, herbs, and Native American music completed the atmosphere.

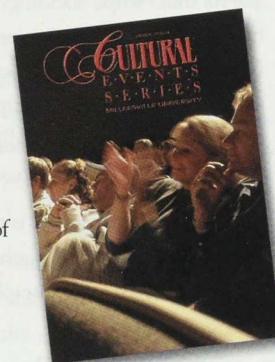

They knew the event was a hit when a student returned his completed survey wearing pigtails and warpaint (catsup and mustard), with the comment, "It was great."

Dr. Francis Bremer

A preeminent figure of early New England, John Winthrop (1588-1649) was the first governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. More than anyone else, he shaped the culture of the region, and his effort to create a Puritan "City on a Hill" has had a lasting effect on American values. This is according to a new book, John Winthrop: America's Forgotten Founding Father, authored by Dr. Francis Bremer, chairperson of the Department of History.

Bremer drew on over a decade of research in England, Ireland, and the United States to write the first full-length biography of Winthrop. The result is a comprehensive work including a detailed understanding of Winthrop's first 40 years in England.

While in America, Winthrop used the skills he developed in England as he struggled with challenges from Roger Williams and Anne Hutchinson, among others, and defended the colony from English interference. The book also reveals the personal side of Winthrop—the doubts and concerns of the spiritual pilgrim, his everyday labors and pleasures and his feelings for family and friends. In addition, Bremer sheds light on important historical moments in England and America, such as the Reformation and the rise of Puritanism, the colonization movement and colonial relations with Native Americans.

Selected as a June choice of the History Book Club, the book has attracted reviews in the Washington Times and Publisher's Weekly. The biography has also been assigned for review by the New York Times and the Christian Science Monitor.

Dr. Richard A. Glenn

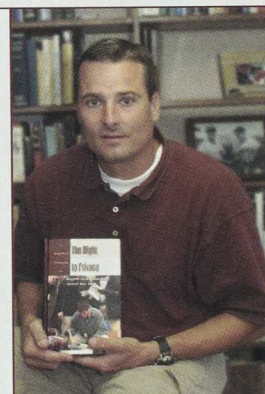

The constitutional right to privacy is the subject a book published in August by Dr. Richard A. Glenn, associate professor of government and political affairs.

Titled The Right to Privacy: Rights and Liberties Under the Law, the 400-page volume is a broad introduction to constitutional privacy, covering landmark cases, important themes, historical curiosities and enduring controversies. It measures the impact of what Louis Brandeis called, "the most comprehensive of rights and the most valued by civilized man."

The book reveals that an individual's right to privacy emerged from the "shadows" of a number of amendments as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court. It traces that concept to its philosophical and common law roots, then looks at how privacy rights have been interpreted, expanded, and sometimes curtailed throughout the 20th century.

It includes a review of privacy rights today, examining euthanasia, polygamy, reproductive rights for inmates, same-sex unions, child adoption by gays and lesbians, and the right to withhold personal information.

Glenn, an expert in constitutional law, joined the Millersville faculty in 1995.

Benefit for MU Theatre

Dr. Bill Dorman, associate professor of communication & theatre, appears with his wife Susan (see photo) in the comedy Same Time Next Year. The special production will support and benefit the University theatre program. Thanks to the Dorman's and many MU alumni are donating their time and talent. General admission is $20 per person or $35 a couple.

Field of SCREAMS

TERROR

It's a typical day on the Schopf brothers' farms. Corn is picked at dawn for sale at the produce stands. Children scurry through the farmhouse with yippy dogs in tow. Oh, and then there's the work on the dismembered corpse and toxic waste exhibits.

STORY BY KELLY SMEDLEY

No, it's not a scene from a Stephen King novel, but it could be. Instead, it's a transformation of Lancaster County farmland into the Field of Screams. And, it's been happening for over a decade.

The Mountville-based attraction—Field of Screams—now in its 11th year, is the creation of Millersville alumni and brothers Gene '89 and Jim '95 Schopf. Together, they have created one of the largest and most popular fright attractions in the nation.

What started as "a red light and few guys with masks popping out of hay bales" is now seven autumn weekends of pure terror. Attendance has tripled every year since Field of Screams opened, with more than 1,000 jittery patrons dying to get in every night.

"That's more than we had the first two seasons combined," smiled Jim as he dipped back in his office chair at Gene's farmhouse on their farm in Silver Spring. Together Gene and Jim own and operate three produce-growing farms in Lancaster County including Field of Screams.

The Schopf brothers grew up Lancaster County, and although their family didn't own a farm, they lived in a farmhouse and worked the fields for pay. Even before college, Gene said he and Jim would create scary mazes for children out of hay bales. "We did crazy things for the boy and girl scouts," Gene remarked.

When they were younger, the two attended Scream in the Dark which was a similar, but much smaller attraction, put on by Youth for Christ. "We had fun going down there," said Gene, remembering the two electric chairs that actually gave attendees a mild jolt.

But the brothers grew up—or did they—and attended college at Millersville. Wrestling was their sport and both distinguished themselves on the mat. Gene wrestled at 150 and was ranked 12th in the nation at one point in his weight class. During the 1994-95 season, Jim compiled a 43-12 record in the 126 weight class. He is the only wrestler in MU history with an over 40-win season. Jim also won the Elwood J. Finley Award, presented to an outstanding Millersville senior athlete.

While Jim was still in college, the brothers decided to host their first haunted hayride to entertain themselves, family and friends. In the beginning, Jim said, "We would jump out of the cornfield with a 2x4. It was pretty lame."

Gene remembered, "I was just out of college, so it was us and the [Millersville] wrestling team. We all ran skits from the field. It was just for fun, but people really liked us."

"YOU GET TO BE CRAZY AND GET AWAY WITH IT"

From there the business took off like a bat out of...well, you know. Each year Gene and Jim improved on the scenes, skits and overall efficiency of the operation. They now offer three main attractions: a haunted hayride, the Den of Darkness (a haunted barn), and the 3-D Frightener, which is a four-story, high-tech haunted house that people explore with 3-D glasses. Jim dubs it as "four stories of 3-D terror."

New this year is the "Splat-a-Spook" paintball booth and expanded entertainment areas for bands and large screens showing clips from horror movies. And, what are Gene and Jim's favorite scary flicks? Are they Freddy or Jason fans? Not surprisingly, they agree on the The Shining—starring Jack Nicholson and based on a novel of the same name by Stephen King—as their favorite horror movie.

In addition to the ten wagons that take the brave-hearted on the haunted hayride, there is an alternative for young children ages eight and under. "Little Screamers Hayride" is non-scary and each kid gets a pumpkin and a toy to take home. And, there's a Scream Shop to buy a gruesome trinket for the ride home or a souvenir T-shirt.

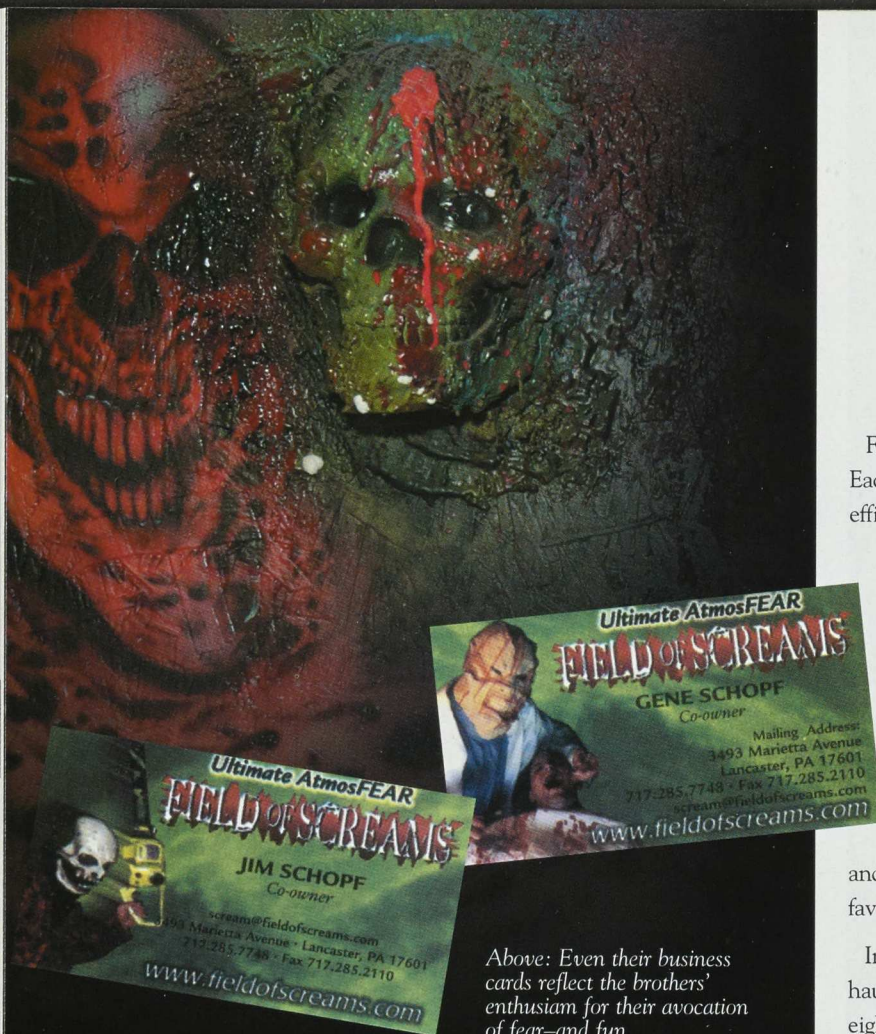

It's all about good, gruesome entertainment and keeping it fresh and creative. Gene explains the basics of fright: "Make people feel like they made it through [a scare] and something else pops up."

The Schopf brothers work closely with their own "Scream Team" that meets almost every day to go over new skits, concepts and designs on how to improve on the Field of Screams experience. "We are currently building sets that we will use two years from now," said Gene.

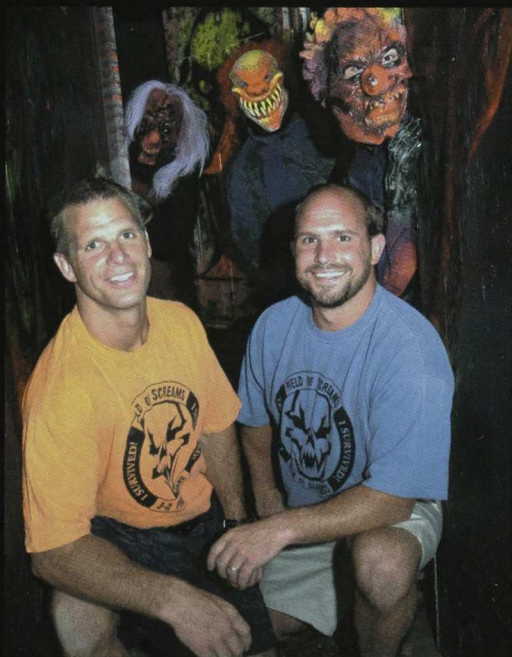

Their "actors" (the Freddy Krugers and other demented types) are also valued for their input. "We ask the actors what they like and don't like," said Jim. "They come back year after year to run their skits."

Nearly all the staff at Field of Screams is comprised of volunteers—actors, drama clubs, and just plain folks who love to scare the wits out of people. The Schopf brothers agree that the people who work for them do it simply for the love of the scare. "You get to be crazy and get away with it," said Gene. "It's fun to go out and be something else."

Gene and Jim rely mostly on live actors, because in their words, "animatronics are neat...but only if coupled with a high-startle scare."

Above: Even their business cards reflect the brothers' enthusiasm for their avocation of fear—and fun.

You need somebody who is high energy and uninhibited.”

The Field’s fearful leaders also attend the annual TransWorld exhibit in Chicago where they can glean tips on making the best fake blood or creating a mutated alien corpse in ten easy steps.

Hard to believe, but these brothers of debauchery also have a soft side. Each year they bus in the local boys and girls club who attend the event for free. They also give a portion of a night’s proceeds to the Make-A-Wish Foundation, hold a canned food drive night for a local homeless shelter and make a donation each year to the Sea Scouts in exchange for having some of the scouts serve as parking attendants. The “Field” is also a perennial participant in the Millersville Parade.

Amazingly enough, Gene and Jim also find time to teach full-time at two Lancaster County public high schools. Gene is a technology education teacher at Conestoga and Jim teaches math at Lampeter-Strasburg. The brothers also coached wrestling in the past, but had to give it up to commit more time to the demons and ghosts in their lives.

When remembering their years at Millersville—before their lives became their best nightmares—Jim and Gene both cite the influence of the late wrestling coach and mentor Floyd “Shorty”

Hitchcock, who died in February 2002, at the age of 50. They credit Hitchcock for laying the groundwork for their strong work ethic and success.

“Shorty instilled motivation and work ethic,” Jim said. “We had it, but he brought it out in us. He taught us to set goals and how to work through any experience.”

Ironically, Gene and Jim are no longer able to celebrate Halloween, since it’s their busiest time of the year. Instead, they live it every day. To them, work is a scream.

WAR'S Remembrance

At every turn on the twenty-acre campus, signs of continuity and change greeted visitors to Millersville State Teachers College's spring, 1945, commencement ceremony. Graceful Victorian buildings stood in opposition to more modern structures completed before war had brought the world into a different season. Old Main, that cavernous complex of offices, classrooms and dormitories, remained the intellectual and emotional center of the campus, but it was now showing its age. Most evident to casual observers that bright spring day was the presence of four men in the graduating class of a mere forty-six students. In so many ways, war had taken its toll.

For members of the Class of 1945, some of whom had entered Millersville three months before the United States entered the European and Pacific theaters, graduation day was bittersweet. Dedicating the Touchstone to the two dozen classmates still on active duty, the editors recalled December 8, 1941, when the entire college community gathered to listen on the radio as President Franklin Delano Roosevelt asked Congress for a declaration of war. "Then we could see only dimly what the future held," they remembered. Four years later, it was apparent "how the war has changed our college years." Some did not come home.

Not only were members of this so-called "greatest generation"—men and women alike—changed by the realities of overseas conflict, so too were homeland institutions like the teachers college in Millersville. World War II (1941-1945) posed one of the greatest challenges in the school's history, in some respects surpassing the travails of the Great Depression years. Having weathered the fiscal crisis of the 1930s, by the spring of 1942 administrators faced the consequence of a sudden departure of male students and faculty. Enrollment dropped by fifty percent, state funding declined, and whole dormitory floors were vacant.

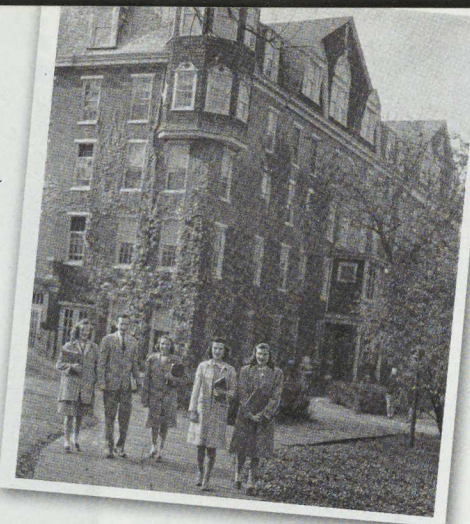

Millersville was a largely female and commuter campus during the war; at one point the ratio of female to male students was 11:1. Not surprisingly, a further enlargement of woman's culture occurred as "coeds" assumed new leadership positions in extracurricular organizations, and helped to direct war-preparedness efforts. This imbalance had its comical features, as the yearbook noted in praising "the unusual group of men who performed so nobly" in "Love's Labours Lost." Young women like Frances Keller, Hattie Osburn, and Ozetta Groff shouldered additional duties on several fronts. By war's end, "brown-eyed Frances" had married Dick Keller, a veteran "famed for his inimitable tart remarks," according to their classmates. The Kellers were among the first married students on campus.

The war's unusual administrative burdens rested heavily on President Landis Tanger, who had skillfully managed school affairs since 1929. After refusing his retirement request in June, 1942, the Board of Trustees reluctantly accepted the president's decision a year later, setting off a little known sequence of events that would change Millersville forever. By July, 1943, a sharply divided board had selected a new president, who withdrew before assuming office. Despite reservations in Harrisburg, after lengthy debate the board nominated alumnus Daniel Luke Biemesderfer as Millersville's ninth chief officer.

It was apparent almost immediately that the trustees had chosen wisely. A proverbial good shepherd, Biemesderfer effected a plan of action that redirected the war crisis to the institution's advantage. Reaching out to local school districts, to the alumni, to state legislators and to the business community, the new president brought Millersville through the last two years of the war on increasingly sound footing.

On that graduation day in 1945, as war's remembrance mixed with dreams of better days, Millersville State Teachers College was poised for an educational renaissance of dramatic proportions. The G.I. Bill created new opportunities at schools across the country, and as men came flooding back to campus, mainly to study Industrial Arts, the student body more than tripled to over 700. New faculty were hired to meet the demand, one of whom was alumnus and veteran William Duncan, who began his distinguished career with a 1947 appointment in the Lab School. That year, Millersville's trustees lobbied for an overdue expansion program that remade the campus environment, laying the foundations for a natural evolution to the status of a liberal arts college.

The 'Ville's human-powered submarine team provides the ultimate experience in problem solving—above, and under, water.

MISSION REDEMPTION

Manufacturing a working submarine provides a real hands-on experience for Millersville students.

Since 1988, Millersville students who are interested in design and engineering have been challenged to test the waters—and their skills—as part of the University's Human-Powered Submarine Team.

It was founded as a student club primarily for industrial technology and technology education majors, but is open to students of all majors.

The mission: manufacture a human-powered submarine that they will race in national and international race competitions.

This year's craft, dubbed "Redemption," met the challenge and captured third place for innovative design at the International Submarine Races in June. Held in Maryland at the Naval Surface Warfare Center's Taylor Model Basin, MU was among 22 entries in the competition. The Naval Center's site boasts the world's largest indoor tank. The race takes place 20 feet deep on an established 100-meter course.

Dr. John Hibberd, professor of industry & technology and one of the team's co-advisers, was very pleased with the sub's

From concept to the race itself, working on the Redemption was a team effort.

notes Hibberd,

performance, particularly since the University was competing with high-level engineering schools. Teams from the University of Quebec, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, University of Washington, Florida Institute of Technology, and Mexico's University of Veracruzana were among the participants.

Millersville's hybrid craft held one person, and had the capability of being powered by either a pump or a propeller. Also, unlike most other subs in the competition, Redemption was completely fabricated from aluminum. The operation of the sub requires the person to steer and power—all, while submerged in deep water enclosed in the small vessel. It is not for the claustrophobic.

Since the race itself was held in salt water, Millersville team was at somewhat of a disadvantage, having practiced only in fresh water. The denser salt water makes for a great difference in buoyancy behaviors.

But, that's just one factor in making adjustments during the competition.

At the national championship held in California in 2000, Millersville's two-person submarine dislocated a chain and broke a gear. It seemed like anything that could go wrong did. But, MU's team prevailed, winning a gold medal in its category.

Despite the mishaps during the competitions, safety is always stressed. A quick-release hatch is built into each sub. And, divers are standing by in the event a rescue is necessary.

Fresh from the races in Maryland, 'Ville team members are already making plans for the design of next year's craft, which most likely will be constructed of a composite material. It will again be operated by one person, who will be able to use either propeller or pump power. The competition next year will be held in Escondido, California.

The races allow the team members, mostly students enrolled in industry & technology majors, to gain the ultimate experience in problem solving. Hibberd and co-adviser, Dr. Haig Vahradian, assistant professor of industry & technology, believe that the students' exposure to questions involving buoyancy, propulsion and ergonomics are invaluable as learning processes.

"In addition," notes Hibberd, "they all must become proficient as scuba divers, a skill many of them did not have before volunteering to become a member of the sub team."

The fascination with travel underwater dates back hundreds of years. The first American submarine, known as the Turtle, was built in 1776 and was equipped with a torpedo to blast British ships anchored in New York's harbor. And, although Lancaster's Robert Fulton is best known for the invention of the steamboat, he built an experimental submarine while in France in 1801. It was designed for warfare—once again, with the purpose of destroying British ships. And, while he abandoned submarine design, Fulton conducted further experiments with torpedoes and received a patent for his work on “igniting gunpowder under water.”

Fortunately, Millersville's submarine team has a win-win formula with the only explosion being a race against the clock.

It's an opportunity to learn about navigation, propulsion, ergonomics, safety and buoyancy. But, aside from the research and development process, the experience builds leadership and project management skills.

Right: The submarine team uses the pool at Pucillo to water test their projects prior to competition. Shown here is the 2002 entry.

Below: The team with the skeleton of the award winning “Redemption” submarine shows the extremely tight quarters for the “human” power.

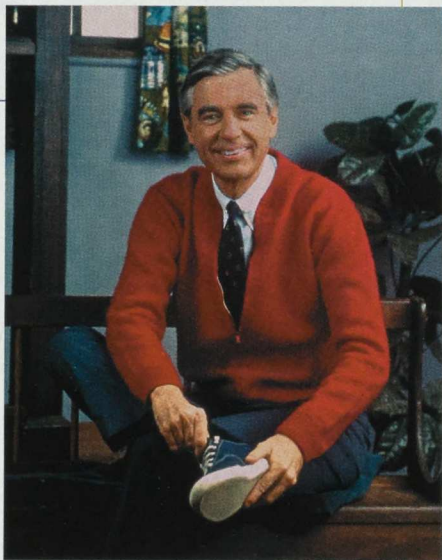

As the creator and host of the award-winning PBS children's series Mister Rogers' Neighborhood, Fred Rogers, touched the lives of millions of children—many who are now adults, and parents themselves.

Rogers' death triggered fond memories and praise for his contributions to educating, understanding, and communicating with children.

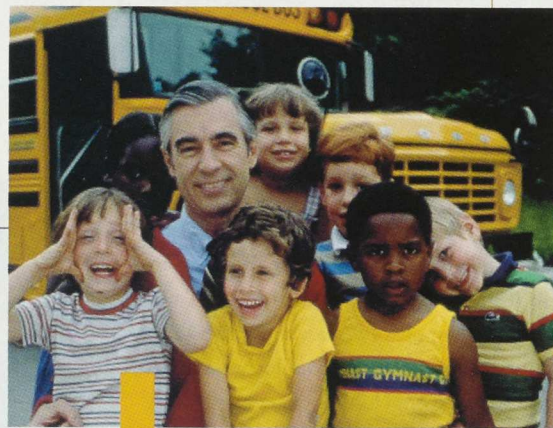

Candace O'Donnell '85 recounted when Mister Rogers came to Millersville in the mid-70s. Enroute from the airport to Millersville, she spoke with Fred Rogers about a subject "dear to her heart," the joys and challenges of parenthood. She generously shared her interview with the Review and excerpts of the interview follow.

O'Donnell vividly remembers the "mob scene" Mister Rogers created when he entered Millersville's former lab school and was quickly encircled by little children. She was also touched by Rogers' belief that parents should try to convey to their children that, without them, they would never have had the opportunity to be parents. O'Donnell says this insight is "something that's so beautiful to me that I often repeat it to myself almost like a prayer."

In February when Fred Rogers died from stomach cancer, a few Millersville education students made a sign honoring him and placed it on the office door of Dr. Stratton

It's a beautiful

...when Mr. Rogers was in the neighborhood.

"Although children's outsides have changed a lot over the years, their inner needs remain very much the same. No matter what lies ahead, children will always need to know that they are loved and capable of loving." Fred Rogers

"Chip" Schaeffer, assistant professor of wellness & sport sciences.

Schaeffer said, "I did watch Mr. Rogers from about age 6-8. He was sort of a link to happy times in my childhood and it was sad when he passed on."

Rogers, it seems, spoke to the child in all of us. He was an adult who was always calm, speaking softly while gently reassuring children that they were special and life was a wonderful experience.

"Fred Rogers was as much of a positive and long-standing American icon as has lived in the last 50 years. While people may lump him in that same 'nerdish' vein as Kenny G...Barry Manilow and Captain Kangaroo, all fall in the realm of 'good people' who promoted an aura of good values, manners, and yes, a touch of class."

For example, before speaking engagements,

Rogers would ask audience members to observe 60 seconds of silence to remember those people who have helped to make them who they are.

His television show was indeed without glitz, but tackled very difficult topics including death, divorce, fears, and other childhood situations like a new baby in the house or a trip to the dentist.

Fortunately, Mister Rogers will live through the taped Neighborhood episodes and the non-profit company he founded, Family Communications, Inc. And, one of his cardigan sweaters is part of the Smithsonian Institution's permanent collection.

"All I know is that when Roberto Clemente died, I cried—because I was too young to understand that heroes do in fact die," Schaeffer said. "When Mr. Rogers died, you could in fact say: Well there goes the neighborhood."

Fred Rogers

In his own words...

On becoming a father

I think that our boys have known about my delight in fatherhood. I know how much I was able to grow along with them, and I've told them that. We didn't have any children until seven years after we were married. I was just almost desperate to be a father. That's something that I wanted more than anything, and when we were told that Joanne was pregnant for the first time, I think that was one of the happiest times I can ever remember.

Teaching by example

There are little things that you don't even verbalize. For instance, ever since our boys were very little, I've always knocked on their door before I've gone in their room. It has delighted me in the last few years [at the time of this interview, his sons were ages 16 and 14] to hear their knock on my door, yet that has never been verbalized. We never said it's "the nice thing to do, or the kind thing to do." We never said that, but we've always done it.

Understanding childhood development

Adults these days seem to feel that we should take short cuts. I think that's so fallacious as far as the development of our kids is concerned because there is an inner order of development that is so helpful for us to understand. For instance, children who are starting to be able to master their own biting aggression are absolutely fascinated with hinges and anything with hinges like a door, a box. So that's the time when their curiosity about things like this can really be enhanced, and that's the time to give a child something with hinges to work with because it is an inner urge. That's why I think that so many people with strict cognitive and early reading approaches have really missed the boat. The inner urges dictate what we can learn.

On play guns for his children

I felt that if they needed them, they'd make them out of what they had—and they did. There's a certain shaped block—half of a bridge or tunnel, and it's very handy for making play guns. I never bought any guns, but the kids themselves bought guns after a while.

Expressing anger

I think that people really need ways of expressing their anger and their hostility rather than denying them. There are appropriate ways, and some of the ways are sports, and of knocking a punching bag. That's what we've tried on the program—to offer a kind of smorgasbord of ways.

On adolescence

I think children have to have certain standards to bump against in adolescence. We need to communicate that we really care about them and that we know this is a tough time. It's not easy to grow up. And, it's hard to be a parent of adolescents. I think the reason it's so tough to be a parent [at this stage] is that you're not only living through your kids' adolescence, but that it has re-evoked our own, and so consequently, we're living with a kind of double adolescence. I wonder if parents couldn't be easier on themselves if they could remember that. Parents are not only going through their own kids striving for separation, but subliminally remembering, and dealing with our own trials from that time [especially since values have changed dramatically].

Parenting

I think that like anything else, parenthood is basically a relationship, and it's a matter of understanding your relationship with yourself before you can grow in relation to somebody else.

I'd like them [his children] to have a responsible attitude about themselves and other people...The more you think about it, the more you realize that a responsible attitude about the world, about themselves, and about others is really a very mature thing to strive for and develop, but that doesn't come overnight. That comes from Day One.

These are excerpts from an interview conducted by Candace O'Donnell in the mid-1970s when Fred Rogers came to Millersville. O'Donnell has a strong family connection to Millersville University. She received her master's degree from MU. Her husband is Dr. John O'Donnell, retired professor of English, and three of their four children were educated at MU.

Alumni enjoy the Thunder

On July 17 alumni and friends from Bucks County enjoyed a beautiful summer evening of America's favorite pastime as they traveled to Waterfront Park in Trenton, N.J., to see the Trenton Thunder take on the Harrisburg Senators. While the Senators prevented a home-team win, MU fans took home t-shirts, a hat, one winning lottery ticket (just $1), and even a foul ball. A brilliant fireworks display finished off an all-around perfect summer night.

Nominations should include the person's full name, years of attendance at Millersville, biographical information, and a statement of why the individual should be included in this book. Photos are encouraged. The deadline for nominations is November 1, 2003.

Loose '47, Mary Ann Gerber '67, Joyce King '83, and Steven DiGuseppe '82. The committee will review all the nominations for possible inclusion and reserve the right for final editing. Alumni Snapshot

Trish '82 and John Doll '82

Music was Trish Doll's first passion, training seriously on the violin since a very young age. Coming from a rich musical lineage with relatives as long standing members of the Philadelphia Orchestra's string section, she first toured Europe with the American Youth Symphony & Chorus.

College helped her find a couple of additional passions. At Millersville, she met her husband, John, while they were both freshmen. There, she discovered her love of writing and put her talent to use working for area media and ad agencies as a student, ultimately majoring in communications. In 1990, she launched her own marketing-public relations agency, Publicity Works, based in Brownstown, Pa. The firm's work for marketing excellence and community service has been recognized with an array of notable regional and national creative awards. In addition, Trish's success as a woman entrepreneur has won distinguished with awards such as the ATHENA and one of Pennsylvania's Best 50 Women in Business.

Today, she seems to be in the enviable position of weaving her passions together. She manages marriage, motherhood, business, community service, and—of course, music, in harmony. John, her husband and business partner, plays the piano and their two children, Richard, 9, and Victoria, 6, are both budding musicians in their own right.

Trish sometimes serenades clients with her prized French-vintage 1725 Claude Pierray violin. She also performs in regional orchestras and musical groups including the Berks Jazz Fest.

Active in the community, she serves as a mentor to Millersville students and helps a variety of non-profit organizations. Trish has recently completed volunteer training for hospice and will play for the patients.

"I think music lifts their spirits and hearts and offers sounds of healing ...it can bring joy to those who live with the challenges, fears and painful losses that accompany any serious illness."

Millersville University has ranked in the top 20 percent among NCAA Division II-affiliated athletics programs nationwide.

MU earned the number 49 slot in the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics' (NACDA)/NCAA Division II. Winning conference, regional and national post-season play determine the standings. This is the highest rating Millersville has received since the poll's inception.

Millersville was rated fourth highest among Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference member institutions, behind IUP (#18), Shippensburg (#35) and West Chester (#46). Edinboro claimed the 50th and final poll slot.

Student-Athlete Spotlight

Chris Maiorino

Football player Chris Maiorino is optimistic that he and his Marauder teammates can attain a PSAC Eastern Division title which, to this point in his career, has been elusive.

The 6-2, 270 lb. Maiorino, one of 11 seniors on this year's squad, has been one of the most versatile offensive linemen in recent Millersville grid history. He has participated in starting roles at guard and at tackle; but, this fall, he will handle the all-important center duties.

"I have been comfortable playing anywhere on the line, but I really wanted to be a center," said Maiorino. "I feel I have a good knowledge of the game, especially offensive line play and I can help my teammates the most."

How badly does Maiorino want to go out a champion? His expressiveness and eagerness entering preseason camp are telltale signs. "There is a sense of urgency to win it all because for me and my [senior] teammates, it's our last opportunity. Winning the East and qualifying for the playoffs have been my goals since I became a Marauder and that has not changed one bit over the course of my career.

"My teammates have helped me along the way, especially the upperclassmen who made me feel part of the program when I was getting started. Now that I am a senior, I want to do the same for the next generation of Marauder football players."

Coach Kevin Kiesel is effusive in praise of Maiorino's leadership. "Chris was named the team's most dedicated player during the off-season, and also was elected as one of our offensive captains. He exudes confidence every time he steps onto the field."

Football is only one part of Maiorino's Millersville experience. As an elementary education major, he has earned dean's list honors and PSAC Scholar-Athlete honors with a sharp 3.4 grade point average.

"Millersville has provided me with a quality education and the country town atmosphere is something totally different from other campuses," he noted.

Make the choice that counts.

Your gift means bright futures for MU students.

Thanks to you, the future is looking bright for Millersville University students.

Starting September 23, a MU student may be calling you and more than 10,000 fellow alumni, parents, and University friends, asking you to make a contribution to Millersville University's 2003-2004 Annual Giving campaign.

This call is all about the future. By making a pledge during your conversation with a member of the MU calling team, you will help to secure future success for Millersville University and our students.

Your Annual Fund gifts support academic scholarships, library materials, student leadership and alcohol-abuse prevention initiatives, athletic scholarships and operations and other co-curricular programs. In addition to support for these traditional areas, you may also direct gifts to facility expansion and renovation projects for Osburn Hall, McComsey Hall, Roddy Hall, and the new Education Instruction Building. Increased support for academic programs and state-of-the-art facilities add up to productive careers for the future alums of MU.

When MU calls, please say "yes" to supporting enriched educational opportunities for Millersville students through the Annual Giving campaign.
