

Parenthetical/In-Text Citations

In-text citations are when you use an outside source to support a claim in your essay. They guide readers to sources that go into more detail on a topic. It's a quote or paraphrase followed by the source information in parentheses.

Quotes

A direct quote is when you take the author's exact words from a source. You use direct quotes when:

- The author is a high authority and could lend you credibility to your main points
- The author's words are articulate enough to support your ideas
- You are unable to put an idea into your own words

Examples of Direct Quote In-Text Citations

Patel uses the word "disability" to describe mental illness to make it sound similar to physical health. Jenell Johnson says that the goal of this approach of persuasion is to shift blame from the person to genes or chemistry "because mental illness is biological... it is not anyone's fault and therefore should have no stigma" (474).

Because the author's name is mentioned in the sentence, only the page number is required in the parentheses.

People suffering with mental illnesses tend to be afraid to ask for help due to the stigma mental health has in societies around the world. This is because, "A diagnosis of mental illness...no matter how long ago, whether minor or severe, whatever the circumstances, can be a permanent identity; the language we often use tells the story: one has heart disease, one is mentally ill" (Reynolds 10).

Since the author's name does not appear in the sentence, both their name and the page number are required in the parentheses.

Patel mentions in his speech how the stigma of mental health causes people to treat the mentally ill with abuse and injustice. "But perhaps the most heartbreaking of all are the stories of the abuse of even the most basic human rights...even in the very institutions that were built to care for people with mental illnesses" (2012).

In the case that a source does not include page numbers (such as with speeches, interviews, etc.), the speaker or author's name should be present in the sentence or in the parenthesis and the source's publication/presentation year should be used in lieu of page numbers.

Paraphrases

A paraphrase is when you reword something that someone else said.

You use paraphrases when:

- You need to simplify the author's words
- You want to explain the main point of a passage
- You want to explain an idea when exact wording isn't important

Examples of Paraphrases In-Text Citations

TED Talks are directed to everyone around the globe. Bentley University's The Biz stated that one reason why TED Talks are popular is because the younger generation is more open to follow global events due to being more connected with others around the world via social media (Kehoe & Diane 2015).

Because the author's name is mentioned in the sentence, only the page number is required in the parentheses.

Patel explains that mental illnesses are the one of the leading causes of disability around the world (2012). These disabilities include autism, intellectual disability, depression, anxiety, psychosis, and dementia.

Since the author's name does not appear in the sentence, both their name and the page number are required in the parentheses.

Hardcastle compares mental and physical health twice in her speech as well. In the beginning of her speech, she says how mental illness can manifest itself in physical ways such as nausea, headaches, fatigue, and shortness of breath (2020).

In the case that a source does not include page numbers (such as with speeches, interviews, etc.), the speaker or author's name should be present in the sentence or in the parentheses and the source's publication/presentation year should be used in lieu of page numbers.

Works Cited Page

The Works Cited page is a separate page at the end of your paper. It includes the references you cited in your paper. These references are a longer form of the in-text citation you already provided.

Books

The following is the standard format for books:

Last Name, First Name. Title of Book. City of Publication, Publisher, Publication Date.

Examples of Book References

Orwell, George. 1984. 1949. New York, Houghton Mifflin Harcourt, 2017.

Because this book was republished, the original publication date is placed after the title.

Suetonius. Lives of Caesars. Translated by J.C. Rolfe, vol. 1, Loeb-Harvard University Press, 2014.

In this case, the book was originally written in another language, so the translator is listed (for edited books, the editor would be placed here as well). This is also a multi-volume work, so the volume is provided after the translator.

Meggs, Philip, and Alston Purvis. Meggs' History of Graphic Design. 4th ed., Hoboken, Wiley and Sons, 2006.

This book has multiple authors, so the first author is listed "Last, First," and the second as "and First Last." Additionally, this book has multiple editions, so the edition used is placed after the title.

Periodicals

The following is the standard format for Journal Articles:

Author(s). "Title of Article." Title of Journal, Volume, Issue, Year, pages.

Example of Journal Article Reference

Forster, Robert. "Achievements of the Annales School." The Journal of Economic History, vol. 38, no. 1, 1978, pp. 58-76.

Electronic Sources

The following is the standard format for a Page on a Website:

Author(s). "Title of Webpage." Title of Website, Publisher, Publication Date, URL or DOI.

Example of Webpage Reference

Younger, Sally. "How NASA Spotted El Niño Changing the Saltiness of Coastal Waters." NASA Jet Propulsion Laboratory, California Institute of Technology, April 3, 2024, www.jpl.nasa.gov/news/how-nasa-spotted-el-nino-changing-the-saltiness-of-coastal-waters, Accessed April 3, 2024.

In MLA, a URL does not need to include "https://" in the reference
